Critical Requirements

The critical area to be addressed during implementation was to identify the finished goods under specific parameters like Design, Color and Size. The company is into production of Lingerie items and basically they design a particular style which is given a Design No and the product is manufactured in different colours and sizes using the same type of fabric. The client required a system where one could create a product (Design No.) and then the system should automatically create "N" number of items depending on the number of colors and sizes required. Further they wanted the Sales, Purchase, Production and Warehouse Management to be streamlined.

How it was Achieved

The "Critical" requirement was achieved by providing a product configurator which addressed the clients end to end item creation requirements. One needed to create the base product in product master with a Design number and then call this number into the product configurator and input the number of colours and sizes involved. On running the module the system would automatically create inventory items in ALL the combinations taking into consideration the "Design No." "Color" and "Size". During the production process raw materials would be issued to Production for a Particular Design No and on receipt from production a "Data Entry Screen" is provided to capture the actual receipt from the production floor with respect to the qty for each of the colours and sizes. On saving this document the system updates the inventory item wise (which is Design wise, color wise and size wise). It is to be noted that the BILL OF MATERIAL (BOM) would be defined for a Design and not for individual items therefore limiting the BOM to Design Nos.
